Come for the beer, stay for the food! My flight of beer was good (try the coconut lime sour), but the food was delicious! I ordered the PLATACHOS-nachos but with plantain chips instead of tortilla chips. So unique and worth the trip! All the food that was ordered for the table looked good. I didn't try anything else though as I was too distracted by my shareable portion of the platachos, which I did not share by the... read more. What Jay J

doesn't like about Andina Brewing Co:

Beware of the predatory towing operation that tows from mislabeled spaces at Andina's building. We parked in an open undesignated space on our visit. A tow truck was there in less than 30 minutes. This part of Vancouver isn't a safe place to leave your car. Suggest you use a taxi or Uber to get to Andina. Otherwise, find a municipal metered space nearby. read more. The restaurant offers free WiFi for its visitors, And into the accessible spaces also come visitors with wheelchairs or physiological disabilities. The comprehensive diversity of coffee and tea specialties makes a visit to Andina Brewing Co even more worthwhile, and you may look forward to the delicious classic seafood cuisine. After the meal (or during it), you can still relax at the bar with a alcoholic or non-alcoholic drink.
