What User likes about Maison Samorn: I do acknowledge that by just walking by it doesn't look like much, but wait until you try the food. This should be in one of the "You got to eat here" episodes. The restaurant is dated and tired looking but please do not let that scare you away because you would be missing out on one of the best if not the best Thai cuisine in our national capital area. I love everything I have tried. If you go at night you can opt t... read more. The place also offers the possibility to sit outside and eat and drink in nice weather. What User doesn't like about Maison Samorn: Went for lunch. Small party of three. Ordered two Pad Thai and a green curry. Received it 70 minutes later. So much for our early afternoon work engagements. Only one server when there should be at least two. Don't open the second section if you can't provide proper service. And they should have the courtesy to warn patrons that service will be slow so they can make arrangements if required. On top of that, my pad th... read more.
